Abstract. The article is a methodological development of test tasks in the Russian language, intended for students of non-linguistic universities with Russian as the language of instruction. In terms of content, the tests have both a practical and theoretical orientation and are focused on all sections of the modern Russian language. They are grouped into sections (phonetics, word formation, lexicology, morphology). Within each section, tasks are grouped into groups. Each group differs in its structure and degree of complexity.

Key words: test, Russian language, grammar, phonetics, lexicology, morphology.

The purpose of this methodological development is to systematize, activate, as well as deepen and improve students' grammatical knowledge of the Russian language acquired in high school.

The proposed development contains tests in the Russian language, which can be used by the teacher for various types of tests and tests, repetition, generalization and systematization of the studied material. A significant place is occupied by tests of varying degrees of difficulty, facilitating the assimilation and consolidation of grammatical material [1].

The tests are grouped into the following sections: phonetics, word formation, lexicology, morphology. Within each section, test tasks are combined into groups. Each group differs in its structure and degree of complexity [2].

Section I consists of test tasks on phonetics, spelling, and spelling. With the help of them, students consolidate knowledge of spelling rules, namely: the relationship between letters and sounds, spelling vowels and consonants, the use of "b" and "B", writing double consonants, continuous / separate and hyphenated spelling of words.
